Holmes Murphy Adds Enterprise Resource for Organizational Wellbeing

Experienced practice leader joins the office in Waukee, Iowa, with a national focus

Waukee, IA – June 18, 2019 – Ali Payne recently joined the Holmes Murphy team as Practice Leader for Organizational Wellbeing. Payne brings more than 19 years of experience developing holistic, innovative solutions to enhance both the employee experience and engagement.

Payne spent the last 15 years with Gallagher, helping organizations around the world develop strategies to impact their employees' financial, social/emotional, career, physical, and community wellbeing. She will bring this Thought Leadership to Holmes Murphy, as she works to create a new division focused specifically on all facets of organizational and client wellbeing and success.

"Ali has excellent insights on how to move the needle on culture and positively affect the bottom line," commented Dan Keough, Holmes Murphy Chairman and CEO. "She will be an invaluable resource for all of our clients and prospects, as well as our Holmes Murphy team."

In addition to her role focused on adding value to all areas of Holmes Murphy's business in support of the company's growth and the needs of its No. 1 priority — clients, Payne will also collaborate with the company's Human Resources team to provide employees with a top-notch work environment. Holmes Murphy has always functioned under the philosophy that an engaging and motivating work environment translates directly into the client experience.

Payne received her undergraduate degree in Exercise Physiology from The University of Iowa and her Master of Science degree in Health Promotion and Human Resource Management from Nebraska Methodist College. Payne also holds a certificate in leadership from Harvard Business School.

Payne resides in Waukee with her husband, Charlie, their daughter, Olive, and their twin sons, Fritz and Otto.
